This is the first time in the 22 year history of East Bay Angler Winter Seminars that a program with four speakers has been attempted. All are writers of renown whose articles are currently appearing in magazines we read. It would not be possible were it not for the fact that they are good pals who hang out together at Quaker Lane Bait & Tackle in North Kingstown. This is their first show together, one they've been planning for months.

And they all fish with their kids or grandkids, in Jim's case. (A five year-old pistol you'll never forget!)

So, what do these guys bring to the party?

Well, starting with Bill Nolan, you have a dedicated big bass man. A trophy hunter who stalks the night shores with eels. (More bio on all four later) He writes for Fisherman and On the Water pretty regularly.

Steve McKenna is part of the Quaker Lane staff. His enthusiasms are in similar directions, particularly the use of lures you can carry with you at all times.

Jim White's recent book "How to Fish Plastic Baits in Saltwater" was a best seller and Jim is currently working on a new book and DVD loaded with more useful tactics.

Mike Laptew (subject of a recent seven page feature in Offshore Magazine) is the audiovisual genius who ties it all together with magical combinations of underwater scenes, music and narration. His films show much of what his pals are talking about.

This show has been specifically created to appeal to all members of a fishing family. It has as much specificunker information as any pro can use; but it has much of the charm and entertainment that the women and children will enjoy.

Winter fishing seminars were invented by the East Bay Anglers in 1985, and have been widely copied. The only way our shows continue to sell out is to stay ahead of the curve. Our speakers know that if they are a hit with this show, they will enjoy a full calendar for the rest of the year. So, sign up early. It will be an evening to cherish!

Bill "Eelman" Nolan

Bill Nolan is a specialist: he fishes eels at night on beaches -- from South County to the Cape. And he does it well. Over the past 23 years he has amassed trophies from RISAA, On the Water, and others. Moreover, he is generous: he writes (and talks) about his hobby for all the major fishing magazines (and fishing shows) with a simple, no-nonsense approach: "here's what I do, and where I do it." His readers and his audiences like that.

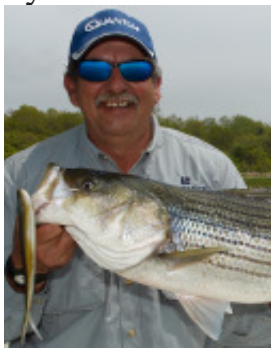

Bill is seen here on a South County beach with a good-sized bass. Note his reel and rod choice. He has many unique ideas about fishing in the dark with a black slithering bait!

Mike Laptew

Please take the time to boot up the web site <Laptewproductions.com> to get some idea of Mike's range of activities. His six videos on salt water fishing are being sold throughout the East Coast. Mike has brought his friends together into this project to produce what he claims is the best seminar of his busy career. His videos of how fish live are sought by scientists as well as sportsmen because they reveal so much. Mike fishes as well, most often with the very best boat and shore anglers -- so he has much to share with his audiences. An evening spent with a Laptew production will be satisfying to pro anglers, wanna-be anglers, as well as the wives and children anglers often leave at home.

"Jimmy" White

Captain Jimmy White, has been chartering clients from 39 states and 17 foreign countries over the past 35 years. Amazingly, he has found the time to publish 2,000 articles on salt water fishing, along with a book on plastic lures. His fishing has been shown on seven network TV programs. Jimmy has also brought his son and grandson into his orbit. Five-year old Devon James (DJ) has shown the most surprising talents for entertaining an audience -- and will appear with him. A half-dozen manufacturers test their products through Jim before release.

Steve McKenna

Like his three buddies, Steve also writes for fishing magazines. He is a surf fisherman, visiting the shores from Maine to New York. But, his main haunts are local waters. Concentrating on the Slug-Go artificial eel, Steve has landed 58 striped bass in the 40+ weight range -- with one 51 pounder.

Devon James White

Look at this five-year old land a striper! Is he the next 'Tiger Woods' of salt water fishing?

Energize your hobby -- teach a kid to fish!

By Will Barbeau

What a surprise it has been to me to find out how much fun it is to teach a kid how to fish! I never had given it much thought until my 14 year old grandson moved to town, and we could spend some time together.

The last time we had fished together was about four years ago. He loved it! But unfortunately, it was the day that my boat popped a freeze plug and we had to abort the trip early because the boat was sinking.

So now we could get together afternoons after school. Our first trips were over to Bullock's Cove. I rigged up three light rods (all won in our East Bay monthly raffles) with "Snapper Poppers." The first lesson was casting those poppers.

And we caught snapper blues. These were put into plastic bags for later use off the bridge.

After catching snappers at the boat ramp and at the inlet by Lavin's, our next trips were to the Warren River Bridge.

For this, we upped the ante by buying a couple eels, and a few worms. We spent one evening at the bridge, learning to cast spin rigs and conventional rigs. We floated worms way up into the pond on the tide, and did the same with the eels. The worms caught schoolie bass, and the eels had a bath.

The next adventure was a half-day with charter captain Charlie Brown. That's the high point so far. Charlie is a great teacher. He explained everything he was doing. We caught a lot of bass and blues, and Jonathan wants more. And so does Will.

Jonathan Barbeau and Charter Capt. Charlie Brown. Notice the downrigger that Charlie uses so well. Jonathan is "hooked" -- he wants to go again!
